The GRT/USD TS-Momentum Crypto backtest failed catastrophically with zero winning trades, driven by a single loss that erased nearly the entire position. A Sharpe ratio of negative 0.95 and a maximum drawdown exceeding 24% indicate severe instability rather than a profitable opportunity. Such a tiny sample size of two trades makes any statistical inference meaningless and suggests the strategy is currently overfitted or simply broken. The core flaw appears to be a lack of effective stop-loss logic or filter conditions that allowed one trade to dominate the entire performance record. The immediate next step is to halt live trading and perform a parameter sweep to find a configuration that generates at least a dozen trades for valid statistical
